UNO seeks to improve class waiting-list procedure

By DEANNA VODICKA

"From my perspective, the Student Information System (SIS) is one of the best things that's happened to the university in the last 10 years," Robert Carlson, a UNO associate professor of communication, said.

SIS is the computer registration system that makes early registration possible. "It's been needed for a long time," Carlson said.

Carlson, who also is chairman of the Communication Department, said the SIS system makes it easier to keep track of items such as transcripts. But, "as wonderful as it is, there were some problems," he added.

"One thing this university has never been able to do is to accurately assess student demand for classes," Carlson said. "Student-demand information is critical, since budget cuts as well as other decisions are based on how many students are interested in a certain class," he said. "With SIS, it would be relatively easy to assess student demand."

The Goals and Directions Committee of the Faculty Senate passed a resolution last month asking the administration to "explore means to obtain information that reflects entire student demand for individual course offerings during registration."

Carlson said the resolution was passed and will be presented to the entire Faculty Senate Nov. 12.

Determining students' class needs is "not a problem," Carlson said. "We've got the capacity to do it, so why not do it?"

But according to William Gerbracht, UNO registrar, this may not be easy to accomplish. "What they are asking for is that for every student who asks for a specific class ... we somehow record that and report it back to the department" chairman.

Gerbracht said that, during the last meeting of UNO's SIS Overview Committee, "everyone present agreed that it is something which should be investigated." Gerbracht said the question is how to go about assessing student class demands.

"One way to do it is to wait-list everybody, which would be a long and cumbersome project," he said. "One of our technical people is of the opinion that we could 'fool' the system so student requests would be recorded."

Gerbracht said the difficulty lies in defining "demand," which "means different things to different people," he said.

Carlson said another problem to be investigated is the difficulty of working with waiting lists during registration.

When a class is closed, a student requesting it can be placed on a waiting list. The problem comes when a student drops that class, creating an opening, and instead of referring to the wait list, the next student who walks up and requests that class is in, he said.

"Ideally, the first student on the waiting list should be put in that slot," Carlson said. "But what happens if that student doesn't want that class now? How do you let that student know?" he asked.

Concerning the wait list, "A lot of the departments said, 'We don't want anything to do with it,'" Gerbracht said. "The hangup occurs when asked what happens to the wait list when we send it to the department," Gerbracht said.

The SIS Overview Committee hopes to establish a waiting-list policy at its next meeting, some time after registration.

According to Carlson, "part of the whole problem is that the students at UNO have so much freedom. It really makes managing this type of thing very difficult," he said.

"We bend over backwards during the first week of the semester letting students drop classes," Carlson said.

"I'm not saying it's bad. I want to give students as much choice as possible, but by doing so it does cause some problems," he said.

"What if you need a class to graduate, get on the wait list, and meanwhile an opening comes up and the computer operator puts someone else in it?" Carlson asked. "What the solution is, I'm not sure."

Student Senate allocates $300 for business conference

By DEB HUTSELL

The Student Senate approved funds for UNO's College of Business Administration Student Advisory Board to hold an information conference on campus Friday and Saturday, Nov. 14 and 15.

Sen. Rob Calvert, a member of the advisory board, said the conference is intended to get ideas from universities in Colorado, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska and Oklahoma that are charter members of the Midwest Association of Collegiate Business Council. The board hopes to charter a UNO chapter of this organization with the information received from the other universities.

The $300 funding request will be used for a reception and banquet dinner before the meetings begin Friday night, Calvert said.

A major goal of the business councils is to increase the credibility of Midwestern universities, Calvert said. A council at UNO hopefully would attract more recruiters from large corporations to UNO each spring, he said.

Sen. Dan Kennedy said he favored granting the funds to the advisory board because "students usually rely on the faculty to motivate them. However, here is a case where the students are taking the initiative to improve their college. It shows leadership on their part, which I think should be awarded."

Sen. Paul Hays said he opposed the funding request because the advisory board has received nearly $2,200 since the beginning of the semester. "I do not think that they should be given more money since they have already squandered $2,200," Hays said.

R. L. Kerrigan, president of the advisory board and newly elected student president/regent, said the $2,200 was granted for specific purposes — such as $400 to create and publish the business college's newspaper "BS in BA." None of the board's funds were for a conference such as this, Kerrigan said.

The funding was approved 23-2, with one senator abstaining and two senators — Calvert and Tony Kiehn — removing themselves from voting because of conflicts of interest.

UNO's Society of Professional Journalists/Sigma Delta Chi (SPJ/SDX) was granted a $600 travel-fund request to attend the SPJ/SDX National Convention in Atlanta Nov. 12 through 15. The senate denied the funding at its Oct. 16 meeting because a representative from the organization was not present to answer questions about the need for the money.

Eric Olson, president of SPJ/SDX, said at the time he did not know it was necessary to be present when the senate considered granting the funds; he attended Thursday's senate meeting.

Olson said three students and one faculty advisor would be attending the Atlanta conference and that the money would be used for plane tickets for two students and lodging for all three. Olson said the third student's fare would be paid jointly by all three students. The measure was approved 18-6.

The Senate unanimously approved a $300 request from the Sidney Buchanan, UNO art professor, stands atop one of his latest art creations, titled Ceres, the name of the Roman goddess of agriculture. The work is outside the UNO Sculpture and Ceramics Studio. Buchanan's eight-ton sculpture will be 25-feet-tall and 35-feet-wide when assembled at Eppley Airfield. Buchanan said he has had some of the pieces together in the studio, but has never had the entire sculpture assembled. "I'm sort of worried whether it will fit together," he said. ## UNO captures conference lead, attendance mark

By JAMIE COLLINS

The UNO Lady Maverick volleyball team captured the North Central Conference lead and a national attendance mark with an emotional four-match victory over North Dakota State Saturday.

The Lady Mavs began their weekend by trouncing the University of North Dakota Friday night 15-7, 15-6, 15-2 in a match that lasted only 45 minutes. The two wins put the UNO league mark at 5-0 and left the Lady Mavs alone at the top of the NCC.

Lori Schutte led the way for the Lady Mavs against North Dakota with 10 kill spikes. Lisa Lyons had nine, Allie Nuzum eight and Nancy Liebenritt seven. Liebenritt also had five blocks and three service aces.

Saturday's match with North Dakota State was a big one for the Lady Mavs. Not only was it against a conference rival, it was the match in which UNO was trying to break the NCAA attendance record of 2,259 set just last Wednesday by North Dakota State in Fargo.

The previous record of 1,906 was set in 1984 at the NCAA Division II finals, with Portland State and Cal. State Northridge going for the conference title.

UNO Women's Athletic Director Connie Claussen decided to target the NCAA attendance record to promote the UNO volleyball program.

"I remembered when the University of Iowa broke the NCAA Division I attendance record for basketball with over 22,000 people, I thought it would be a neat idea," Claussen said. "I feel once the public sees how exciting and powerful volleyball can be, they will want to come back."

UNO broke the attendance record with 3,004 in paid attendance. This doesn't include UNO employees or students with school identification.

The Lady Mavs lost the first game of the match in what Coach Janice Kruger called "a case of the jitters while playing in front of 3,000 people. Losing the first game didn't hurt us, it helped us calm down and relax," she said.

Ambassador calls Britain key to NATO

By MARK ELLIOTT

North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) countries are changing — for the worse, according to Charles Price, U.S. ambassador to Great Britain.

Price spoke to about 500 area business people Nov. 4 at a breakfast sponsored by UNO's College of Continuing Studies.

"New winds of change are blowing in NATO these days — and some are ill winds," Price said. "To put it bluntly, we no longer seem to be able to rely on the old consensus, the common purpose and common approach we once took for granted," he said.

NATO was formed in March 1949 by nine European countries, the United States, Canada and Iceland. Its stated purpose was to defend Europe against Soviet expansionism by presenting a unified and strong alliance.

Price said the reasons for the changes in NATO are not easy to recognize. Current political happenings are undermining the alliance, he said.

Although NATO enjoys exceptional cohesion among leaders of its member countries, Price said, many are facing re-election.

According to Price, English elections, which must be held before June 1988, will be the most important.

The Tory Party and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will be trying to remain in power against a strong Labor Party. Price said the elections could be a tossup. "I think Thatcher has a better than even chance" of staying in power, he said.

However, if the Labor Party came to power, drastic changes may occur within the British military and within NATO, he said.

"Britain's Labor Party has declared its intention — unilaterally — to do away with all nuclear weapons on British soil if and when it comes to power," Price said. According to Price, that would include American cruise missiles, nuclear-armed submarines and nuclear-capable bombers based in Great Britain as part of NATO's defense force. Britain's own nuclear capability includes 64 Polaris submarine-launched missiles.

Price said if Great Britain decided to dismantle its own missiles, it would be Britain's right to do so since these weapons are not part of NATO's defense shield. But "the same situation does not prevail when it comes to the threatened removal of U.S. cruise missiles, nuclear-capable aircraft and ballistic-missile submarines," Price said. "These weapons really are NATO assets."

"Soviet leaders have promised to reduce their missiles; one-for-one with the British should a future (British) government decide to do away with nuclear weapons," Price said. "That would mean that when Britain reduced from 64 missiles to zero, the Soviets would drop from about 10,000 to 9,936," he added.

Price said many peace organizations' thinking is flawed. "While I do not challenge their sincerity, I have trouble accepting their conclusions," he said. "Britain is not just a member (of NATO), but a pillar of the alliance and of its nuclear strategy," he added.

If the British decide to disarm their country, Price said, it might mean the disintegration of the alliance.

"If the NATO (nuclear) shield cracks, who will replace it?" Price asked rhetorically.

Senate approves funds for theater festival

UNO chapter of the Dramatic Arts Student Organization (DASO). The money will be used for receptions DASO will host during the Nebraska State Theater Festival at UNO Nov. 20 through 23.

Peggy Riley, DASO member, told the senate that the receptions, planned to be held in Annex 22 on the west end of campus, will give the performers from the visiting colleges a chance to relax after their performances. She said the festival will be a chance to "show off UNO." DASO has raised the remainder of the cost for the receptions through private pledges and from its own fund-raising efforts, Riley said.

The UNO Student Senate elected Sen. Kennedy as its new speaker. Also nominated were Sens. John Majorek and Tony Kiehn; Kiehn declined the nomination.

The senate also voted 17-4 to permit R. L. Kerrigan, student president/regent-elect, to act as an ex officio member of the senate, allowing him to make motions and speak on senate matters. As ex officio members, student presidents cannot vote. Kerrigan, who takes office in January, would in effect be just an observer without the ex officio status. After the senate meeting, objections were raised to the motion on this measure; Sen. Guy Rudloff made the motion.

It is not clear if Sen. Rudloff was within his rights to make motions or to vote on matters at Thursday's meeting because he had not yet been sworn in due to his absence during the swearing-in ceremony at the start of the meeting Thursday.

Allison Brown-Corson, UNO's current student president/regent, who lost her re-election bid in last month's Student Government elections, said she did not know what action, if any, would be taken against Sen. Rudloff. Until she is able to speak to a senate advisor in Lincoln concerning parliamentary procedure, Brown-Corson told the Gateway Friday, no action against Rudloff will be considered.

If You Have 60 Credit Hours... YOU ARE ELIGIBLE FOR O.C.S.

If you have 60 accredited semester hours... and can achieve a high score in a special aptitude test... you could be just 22 weeks from earning the gold bars of a Second Lieutenant in the Army Reserve... and ready to take on your first Reserves leadership assignment.

Qualify and you'll attend an 8-week Basic Training Course... then go on to a 14-week Officer Candidate School (O.C.S.) which will change you both mentally and physically. When you graduate, you'll receive your commission as an officer in the Army Reserve and continue training in a Branch Officer Basic Course. Then you'll return home to serve in a nearby Reserve Unit... usually one weekend a month and two weeks annual training.

It's a great opportunity to gain the skills and begin the practice of the kind of leadership and management prized so highly by civilian employers.

You need not have completed your degree... just have the semester hours and a lot of ability and confidence to qualify.

A message for University of Nebraska employees during Open Enrollment:

Yes, we want to provide our members with cost-efficient health care. But we know that only quality health care is cost-efficient.

So, we make sure you have your choice from a long list of excellent primary care physicians. And you receive personal, ongoing care just as you always have. In a private office or clinic, from your chosen physician.

HMO Nebraska offers you all the benefits you would expect from a quality HMO. No claim forms to file, no deductible amounts to meet, minimal co-pay amounts on prescriptions, and office visits that are covered by your monthly payment.

What's more, HMO Nebraska can offer you benefits the others can't. The peace of mind that comes from knowing that we're a subsidiary of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Nebraska, a company whose record of good service goes back nearly 50 years; that we're homegrown, with the experience to do it right; that we're here to stay.

And there's additional peace of mind when you're away from home, because HMO Nebraska belongs to the HMO U.S.A. network, which offers emergency care to HMO Nebraska members when they travel.

Quality care, less hassle, more peace of mind. Three good reasons to pick HMO Nebraska during Open Enrollment.

As a University of Nebraska employee, you have received information on HMO Nebraska in the mail. We hope you will give it your careful consideration. If you have questions about the information, or about the sign-up materials, please call us at 800-228-9200, 24 hours a day during November.

Petition checks Boyle

With the number of signatures on petitions to recall Mayor Michael Boyle still climbing, the threat of a new election will hopefully force the mayor into acting like a responsible public official.

Citizens for Mature Leadership collected more than 20,000 signatures on petitions, and the group plans to continue its drive until its Nov. 25 deadline. The petitions must contain a minimum of 19,669 valid signatures from registered voters in Omaha for a recall election to take place, and voters at polling places were main targets during the Nov. 4 elections.

It would be a dangerous precedent, however, to boot the mayor out of office in the middle of his second four-year term. Recall petitions are a necessary means for keeping public officials in check, but their service as impetus for removing civic leaders from office must be based on extreme instances of neglect of duty or intolerable misconduct in office.

As infantile and uncouth as such behavior as flipping butter patties in a public restaurant is, for example, it does not warrant removal from office. The mayor has committed indiscretions, but he has committed no crimes. He was also within his power as Mayor of Omaha to fire Police Chief Robert Wadman for insubordination.

Voters cannot change their minds every time the wind shifts direction. The time for officials to be removed from or placed in office is during general elections when voters are supposed to make informed, educated decisions about the candidates they elect.

A successful petition drive would not lead to the removal of the mayor from office. It might compel him to take seriously the public he serves and to behave in manners appropriate to the office he holds.

Time to make some deals?

Expediency over idealism means ransoming hostages

Pragmatism, in the worst sense of the word: That describes the Reagan administration's reported dealings with Iran during the past 18 months, dealings that apparently included indirect shipments of U.S. arms and military supplies to Iran.

Politics, it is said, make strange bedfellows; international politics, it seems, make for some of the strangest.

According to news reports beginning late last week, the White House opened a secret channel to Iran via Robert McFarlane, President Reagan's former national security adviser.

Reagan reportedly approved the new overtures toward Tehran, which originally were intended to end Tehran's support of terrorism, facilitate the release of Americans held hostage in Lebanon and perhaps gain some influence with moderate elements that might succeed Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

State Department officials said the operation was handled by the staff of the National Security Council instead of the Central Intelligence Agency — which must consult State and Defense Department officials and report to Congressional intelligence committees. Even Secretary of State George Shultz evidently knew little or nothing about the operation until recently. Early last month Shultz told a meeting of Arab ministers that Washington was doing all it could to stop arms shipments to Iran.

Although the contacts with Tehran originally weren't to include U.S. arms shipments, such shipments reportedly soon were approved and began through Israeli intermediaries, in a further effort to secure the release of Americans held hostage by pro-Iranian Islamic fundamentalists in Lebanon.

U.S. agents apparently arranged to ship U.S. arms to Iran on a Danish ship via an Israeli last month. Last week, after 18 months of captivity, American David Jacobsen was released in Beirut.

In July 1985, after another reported shipment of U.S. arms to Iran, another American, the Rev. Benjamin Weir, was released from captivity in Lebanon. After a short suspension, U.S. military shipments apparently resumed to Iran. That same month another American hostage, the Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, was released in Lebanon.

As of Sunday, there was talk at the State Department that Shultz might resign over this operation, to which he apparently was opposed.

But while Shultz might look foolish, this situation makes the Reagan administration look far worse. In effect, it appears Reagan was willing to ransom the release of U.S. hostages. And this is the administration that preaches it will not make deals with terrorists, the administration that takes a tough stance against nations that support or sponsor terrorism, a category Americans are told Iran fits.

Reagan criticized Jimmy Carter for being too soft on Iran during the 1979 hostage crisis.

This is the Reagan administration that exports European governments to take stronger steps in dealing with terrorists and nations that support them.

What are U.S. allies to think now? What of England, which recently took the decisive step of severing diplomatic relations with Syria, whose officials Britain said supported a recently foiled terrorist plot in Britain.

And then there's Israel, perhaps the prime example of a nation that doesn't tolerate terrorists or their supporters, a nation whose citizens so often are victims of terrorism. It's appalling to think that Israelis, of all people, would assist in this secret operation.

And the plot thickens still further — and more absurdly — when one considers that the U.S. arms are for use against Iraq, with whom Iran is locked in the seventh year of what has become a war of attrition.

Washington, Moscow and even Israel reportedly would rather see Iraq win that war, which makes the U.S. arms shipments even more ludicrous. Of course, it is said the U.S. military supplies will not tip the war in Iran's favor, which means the U.S. arms will only help prolong the bloody Persian Gulf war.

Granted, the release of all Americans held hostage in Lebanon would be welcome, as would decent U.S. relations with post-Khomeini Iranian moderates. But are these potential gains worth selling weapons to a nation whose current leader thinks of America as the "great Satan"? If Reagan is trying to win hostages' freedom by selling military supplies to a country that might have had a hand in kidnapping Americans to begin with, the White House would do well to climb down off the soapbox from which it lectures other nations about the virtues of taking a harder line against terrorism and governments implicated in it.

If the Reagan administration determines U.S. policy based on expediency, Reagan should skip the rhetoric about not making deals.

If Reagan indeed approved U.S. arms shipments — indirect or otherwise — to a nation as unpredictable as Iran, he risked being branded a duped hypocrite.

McFarlane reportedly went to Iran again in September, when another shipment of U.S. arms was arranged. It was soon thereafter that Shultz met with the Arab foreign ministers.

Because Iran declined a negotiated end to its war with Iraq, Shultz told the ministers, "we have intensified our efforts to discourage our friends from selling arms to Iran."

Apparently the Reagan administration wanted that market for the United States.

Q: What do you think about the petition drive to recall Mayor Michael Boyle?

'God' manifests power with punches

Part two of a two-part column.

The story so far: Karen and several other passengers on a bus trip are having a 4 a.m. breakfast at the Ave Maria Truck Stop Grill 'n' Gas-em-up, a sleazy little place just off the interstate. In the course of the breakfast stop, a mother tries to keep her two young children from arguing, an elderly couple passes around photos of the grandchildren, a folk singer's tales of knowing famous people turns out to be just blowing in the wind, and a man who thinks he's God is sitting at Karen's table.

I couldn't believe it. The glass of water was gone, and this weirdo was drinking a wine cooler straight from the bottle. I thought the waitress was being sarcastic when she told him to change the water to "a bottle of Bartles and Jaymes," but stranger things have happened at 4 a.m., even back home in Omaha.

"Hey, you want one, lady?" The man claiming to be God grinned at me. "I've got five more of these inside my coat."

He opened his coat and revealed five bottles inside various parts of his coat's lining. He pulled out the bottles, a "Kiss me — I'm from Ohio!" T-shirt, six pairs of salt and pepper shakers from fast-food restaurants, a package of clove cigarettes and an ashtray marked "Ko-Zee Inn, Muddy Creek, Wyo."

"Wait a minute," I said. "I'm not sure what God is, but I doubt he's a kleptomaniac."

"I am not a kleptomaniac," he said, putting the items and a full sugar-packet holder inside his coat. "I'm God. I created the world, so everything belongs to me. God doesn't need money."

"I'm not a kleptomaniac," he said, putting the items and a full sugar-packet holder in his coat. "I'm God. I created the world, so everything belongs to me. God doesn't need money."

Besides," he said, apparently realizing I might have thought he could change water into a wine cooler, "to have created a wine cooler out of that glass of water would have been a gross manifestation of power."

"Is that so?" I said. "Then wouldn't revealing your identity also be a gross manifestation of your divinity?"

"Of course not," he said. "I'm just stating a fact, that's all. I know everything, can do anything, can be anything."

This last statement caught the attention of the would-be folk singer at the next table. "So, you're God, right?" The folk singer came over to the table and shook hands with the alleged divinity. "I'm Paul Olson, once played a little guitar for the Byrds."

"In your dreams!" yelled one of the UNL students whom the singer was trying to impress.

"Anyway," Olson continued sarcastically, "I've been trying to make a go of it as a solo act for some time now. So are you still into miracles?" The UNL students laughed.

The man claiming to be God looked Olson up and down for a few seconds. "Maybe, but it would be a gross manifestation of power," he said. "Besides, I heard you sing in Trout Creek, Utah, once. Pal, it would take more than a miracle to make you a star — it would take a complete overhaul!"

"Really?" Olson said. "You may be God, but you sure don't know talent when you hear it. Man, I've toured with the best. The last time I opened for the Grateful Dead..."

"Give me a break," another student yelled. "Everyone has opened for the Dead!"

The man who claimed to be God took off his coat. "You're lucky I'm not really mad, otherwise I'd call down a couple of lightning bolts to take care of you. Since I'm a merciful God, I'll just beat you into a pulp, that's all."

Olson took off his coat. "Not if I finish you off first," he said. The UNL students stood on the booths to get a better view.

The elderly couple stopped describing the youngest grandson's first words to the young mother. The kids stopped arguing over who was going to be G.I. Joe for Halloween, yelled "A fight! Hey, neat!" and started arguing over what side to take. A few stray truckers wandered in to watch the show. I went to find the bus driver or the manager.

The waitress beckoned to me from the kitchen. "I've already called the sheriff, hon," she said. "Every time that nut comes in, there's always trouble. Except for the last time. He was here, and another guy came in who also said he was God. We expected the worst, but they got along real well. They had a couple of drinks together and agreed it was OK for both of them to be God. Don't ask me how — I'm no shrink."

Just then, one of the UNL students came up to me. "Did you find the bus driver yet?" she asked. "I told my boyfriend to mind his own business, don't bait that damn phony folk singer, don't get messed up with that God guy, but does he listen? No way! He's got to go out and be Mr. Macho here and try to break up the fight. So they're both beating up on him."

I shook my head. "And I thought I had trouble coping with reality," I said.

Just then, the bus driver returned from his four-long conversation with the gas station mechanics. "What the hell is going on here? We're ready to go. Come on, either get on the bus or get left behind," shouted the driver.

The fight stopped, and the passengers headed for the bus. As we reboarded, I heard the would-be folk singer say to himself, "Damn — busted by the reality police again."

It's still rock 'n' roll to the 'Piano Man'

Billy Joel lets his talent speak to sellout crowd at Civic

"It's a pretty good crowd for Omaha," sang Billy Joel to the sellout audience of 10,000 at his Nov. 3 concert.

From guitar to baby-grand piano to center-stage, Joel's diverse talent and power gripped the crowd at the Civic Auditorium for more than two and a half hours.

Joel opened on guitar with "It's a Matter of Trust," then hit the keyboards to play a variety of hits dating between 1973 (the "Glass Houses" and "Innocent Man" albums.

Slapping outstretched hands as he ran around the sloped stage, Joel's raspy voice didn't miss a beat while singing such crowd favorites as "You May Be Right" and "It's Still Rock 'n' Roll to Me."

His energy astounded the audience, and the visually flushed performer returned for four encores. In the third encore, the 37-year-old musician leaped onto the piano, grabbed the microphone and sang "Big Shot."

Joel rarely spoke during the concert, opting instead to let his talent do the talking. Even his introduction of band members were done creatively, with piano rhythm and rhyming lyrics.

Physically drained after the third encore, Joel sat on the drummer's rise, held his head in his hands momentarily, and said in a soft voice, "Good night, Omaha."

To the cheers of "Bil-ly, Bil-ly," Joel caressed the ivories for a fourth encore, and closed singing "This Night Will Last Forever."

For 9,999 fans and this UNO reporter, it was a truly dynamic performance by the soft-spoken piano man from Hicksville, N.Y.

year of his album "Piano Man") and 1986, including songs from his new album, "The Bridge."

Joel's music on his new album ranges from the hot jazz of "Big Man of Mulberry Street" to the melancholy blues of "Baby Grand" to the love ballad "This Is the Time."

Whether the material was old or new, Joel played enthusiastically and enjoyed himself with improvisations of "Piano Man" and stool-flipping antics during "Angry Young Man."

His ability to create a mood with his music and lyrics was intensified with stage and sound effects. "Good Night Saigon" was staged with the deafening sound of rotating helicopter propellers, and "Pressure" was performed with rows of stage lights fiercely pulsating to the refrain.

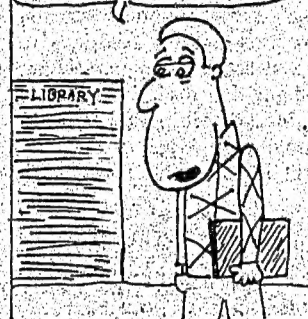

After entrancing the audience with his mastery of keyboards, Joel took center stage and performed a string of hits from his

Last minute Morris kick lifts Mavs over North Dakota

By TERRY O'CONNOR

UNO senior running back Gerald Kellogg wanted something memorable to look back on in his final home game as a Maverick.

So Kellogg had his best day ever running the football for UNO, pounding the Fighting Sioux for 116 yards on 23 carries and teaming with fellow senior, kicker Greg Morris, to lead the Mavs to a 17-14 win over North Dakota Saturday.

"This was Gerald Kellogg's best game as a Maverick," Buda said of the South Dakota University transfer. "His overall play was outstanding. He ran tough inside and he blocked well when he didn't carry the ball." Kellogg was named the UNO offensive player of the game.

Morris, who has been UNO's most consistent offensive threat this year, booted a 20-yard field goal with 45 seconds remaining to lift the Mavs to their fifth win in 10 games and evened their North Central Conference mark at 4-4.

Speaking for the 13 seniors on the football team, Kellogg said, "We wanted to go out with a good game, so when we look back on our senior year we'll have something to remember."

But if memory fades, Morris will have only to consult the UNO record book. Morris snapped the UNO career-scoring record for a kicker after he converted his second extra point of the game. Morris finished the game with 138 points in his career to break Mark Pettit's standard of 134.

Morris tied Pettit, UNO's placekicker in 1981-83, for career field goals with 26. It was the first time, however, that Morris won a game in the last minute with one of his boots.

"It was just like an extra point," Morris said. "It wasn't a tough kick."

Morris, who hasn't missed an extra-point attempt in eight chances this year, has kicked nine of 13 field goals to account for 35 of the Mavs' 101 points this year. Of the four kicks he's missed, three were from the 50-yard line or further.

"We're going to miss Greg's spirit and consistency," Buda said. "He's been a tough competitor for us."

UNO, which won all five of its home games this year, scored on a 71-yard drive the first time it had the ball. Sophomore running back Rick Gales touched the ball twice in the drive, bursting around end for 31 yards on a third-and-4 play and slicing into the end zone on a 41-yard run up the middle. Gales finished the game with 99 yards on 13 carries and two touchdowns.

UNO dropped the ball twice in the first half, and North Dakota recovered both fumbles. The second fumble set up the Sioux's tying touchdown. Gales lost the first fumble at the UNO 39, and Russel Heins turned the ball over after a short reception at the UNO 41. Six plays later North Dakota quarterback Kurt Otto hit split end Mark Veldman with a 19-yard touchdown pass.

The Fighting Sioux threatened again in the first half when they moved to the UNO 14 with less than two minutes to play. Consecutive sacks by another senior, defensive tackle Jim Nekola, foiled the Sioux.

The Mavs came out moving the ball in the third quarter but stopped themselves on every drive. Mav quarterback Todd Sadler twice threw interceptions into the end zone on UNO's first two possessions, and on a third-and-1 play Sadler had to fall on a mishandled snap, forcing UNO to punt.

"We had two definite scoring drives that we killed with turnovers," Buda said. Buda could be heard on the sidelines in the third quarter telling his team not to make mistakes. "That just proves they don't always listen to me," Buda said.

The Mavs broke through on their first possession of the fourth period. Sadler connected on a key pass in the drive, hooking up with Heins for 8 yards on third-and-6 from the Sioux 41. Four plays later freshman Gales recorded his second career touchdown with a 2-yard run.

The Sioux answered with a 12-play scoring drive of their own to tie the score at 14 with 5:04 to play. "They've been moving the ball against everybody," Buda said. "For a banged-up defense, we played well."

Senior outside linebacker Paul Lafond won the UNO defensive player of the game award for the second straight week on the strength of his 18 tackles.

Buda praised Lafond's effort. "He's only about 85 percent," Buda said, referring to fact the Elkhart, Kan., native was playing with a ruptured hamstring. "He's playing on heart right now for us," Buda said.

The Mavs, who have yet to win on the road, travel to Vermillion, S.D., next week to challenge the nationally-ranked South Dakota Coyotes in the season finale. The Coyotes set a national rushing record for any level earlier this year when they had five ballcarriers gain over 100 yards in one game.

UNO sets record

Volleyball

After the first game, UNO settled down and took control of the match to defeat NDSU 13-15, 15-6, 15-2, and 15-7.

Leading the way and playing in her final home match for the Lady Mavs was Nuzum, who had 19 kill spikes and 17 digs. Lisa Lyons also had superb performance with 15 kill spikes and 22 digs.

"Lisa played absolutely fantastic," Kruger said. "She was unstoppable. Her blocking, digging, and hitting were great for us."

"When we started getting the momentum in the second game, it took the steam out of NDSU," Kruger added. "Player to player we match up stronger than NDSU. That was the key."

Another area that helped the Lady Mavs was the record-breaking crowd. "It was really, really special," Kruger said. "Wouldn't it be great to play in front of a crowd like that all the time?"

What made it more special was that it was the final UNO home match for seniors Darla Melcher and Nuzum. Nuzum played the first match with tears flowing.

"The tears started the first game, but I soon realized if I wanted to win I had better get with it; this was my last home match," Nuzum said. "The crowd was absolutely fantastic. It's probably the best feeling I ever had, I knew we were going to win when I saw the crowd."

Melcher said: "It was good to see such a huge crowd. I think the crowd had a lot to do with the way we played. It was the neatest feeling in the world."

"I was really excited to see all the people. I didn't know if the Nebraska football on TV was going to affect us or not. I'm glad it didn't," Lyons said.

Reflecting on her final match as a Lady Mav, Nuzum said, "The best decision of my life was to come to UNO, and I'm glad I did. Volleyball has been such a big part of my life. I'll miss all my friends and all the people I have met. It's been great," she said.
